Aerosol-Cloud Interactions in Global Climate Models

The interactions between aerosols and clouds represent a key source of uncertainty in model simulations of both historical and future climate change.

This project will combine both global climate model simulations and satellite observations to diagnose the radiative impact of aerosol-cloud interactions and better constrain their representation in climate models.

UNIVERSITY OF MIAMI

Prof. Brian Soden, b.soden@miami.edu